“ Ross was a dear friend and mentor to many of us, he served faithfully and without complaint; regardless of how he was feeling, always with a smile. We all felt blessed to be in his presence and listen to him bring history alive; not just about baseball, but about the transition we made as a nation and as a people coming together despite past transgressions. I and the many people he touched during his life were fortunate to know him and blessed that God had put him our lives. May we never forget him or his love.

“ Ross was a dear friend of mine from church. He was an usher. He would always talk in the back of the church and I would turn around and tell him and the other usher to SHHH. One Sunday they dedcided to talk and waited for me to say something to them and Ross brought tape and put it on his mouth. This time I had to laugh. He was a good friend and always had somehting funny to say in the mornings after church. I really missed him when he moved to Texas.

Enjoy your new Life Ross!

“ We first met Ross in 1984 at a Cardinals baseball game sponsored through St. Bridgette's Catholic Church. We remained friends throughout his time in St. Louis and enjoyed hearing stories of his years in the Negro league. He was a sincere, dear soul with an abiding faith. Knowing that he was not eating well and not feeling the best, we made the trip to Garwood about 13 months ago to hear the old stories he told so well one more time. Meeting his plump canine companion, Dottie, and the Ramseys was a special treat of the visit. We have lasting memories of Ross and he will never be forgotten. May he rest in peace at home at last.
